Perlis of Railroad Life.

To the Editor:
About 5 P. M. Tuesday people fiding along the county road near here saw the unusual spectacle of a giant low-motive on the Central Railroad enveloped in clouds of steam, with the engineer and conductor clinging to the swaying conventeher. The engine was drawing a fast freight going cast on the main tack, and when coming down the Fanword grade burst a pipe, and in a moment was a mass of steam. The fireman was stirring up the fire at the time, and was badly burned about the face and hands by the flames, which were forced outward by the hot air and steam. The engineer and conductor, who was also riding on the locomotive, hustled out of the front whichows and down on to the cowcatcher, where they clung ready to jump if the engine left the mills. Refore leaving his cab the engineer whistled for brakes, and they were set on each car, but so great was the momentum on the down grade that the train was peanly to Cranford when it stopped. Traffic was delayed for some time, as both of the locomotive's connecting rods broke, and she had to be pulled off on a switch by another locomotive or connecting rods broke, and she had to be pulled off on a switch by another locomotive. It says that a policeman took me to the Bridge station-house in Brocklyn for taking a pecket-book belonging to Mrs. Catherine Worthley, of Jersey City. The facts are that the woman, accompanied by a man, rode over on my train accompanied by a man, rode over on my train from Brocklyn. She got off at New York, and when I got back to New York again the man said I had the pocketbook. I asked him if he saw me pick it up. He said, "No, but another man had." When we got back to Brocklyn I called a policeman myself, and we all went to the station-house. I told the Capitaln what had occurred. The man refused to make a complaint and that ended the matter. The charge that I picked up the pocketbook was untrue. I did not see H.

On the cross braces under the park benches were hundreds and hundreds of these little birds with their feathers so wet and heavy and so tightly glued to their poor little bisdies by water, that they were perfectly helpless. Every now and again, as a yet stronger gust of wind swept along the ground, it overlaineed them, and being unable to regain an upright position, they dropped off into the current of water which was rushing with great violence towards the sewers. Here and there I stopped to pick one up and place it on its perch. It was a sad night for the poor, shelter-less sparrows.
